

Child Transport Application for Day Care Institutions

In some cases, it is necessary to transport a child for the child to be able to receive special pedagogical assistance. In such cases, a child has the right to free transport.

'If it is necessary to transport the child for it to be able to receive special pedagogical assistance, the child has a right to such transport. The child has a right to any necessary traveling companion and supervision', cf. the Act relating to day care institutions (the Day Care Institutions Act), §36 - Right to Transport for Children Receiving Special Pedagogical Assistance.

Necessity exists if a child's parents/guardians bear a significantly greater burden in connection with transporting their child than other parents who have children at the same preschool day care centre do. This would typically be so in those cases where provision of assistance to the child takes place far from home or where there is transport of the child between the preschool day care centre and another location, at which provision of assistance to the child takes place.

Children who have a right to receive instruction in sign language also have an equivalent right to transport, supervision and a traveling companion, cf. §38 of the Act relating to day care institutions (the Day Dare Institutions Act).
